F CAMPION COLLEGE AND SASKATCHEWAN WRITERS GUILD POETRY NIGHT

An evening of poetry with special guests.
Poets: Randy Lundy & Jeanette Lynes

Although she is currently Writer in Residence at the Saskatoon Public Library, Jeanette Lynes says she has "lots of affection for Regina", where she has done readings numerous times in the past. Lynes will read from her published and recent poems, and says that the audience can expect some laughs, and maybe some quintessential Canadian moments.

"Hopefully," she adds, "I will be able to keep everyone awake."

Randy Lundy is the author of two books, and the recipient of the Saskatchewan Book Award for First Peoples Publishing. He teaches at the First Nations University of Canada and in 1999 was writer in residence for its predecessor organization, the Saskatchewan Indian Federated College. Lundy, who grew up in northern Saskatchewan, uses images he finds in nature because. "Nature makes itself known to us, even in the city, and that's a blessing for us," says Lundy. "My poems help remind people of the magic that surrounds us, and celebrates it."

Student Supports Planned Giving

"We make a living by what we get. We make a life by what we give," observed Sir Winston Churchill. If so, then U of R employee and student Martin Callaghan has made an emphatic statement about his life. Callaghan, who has completed the requirements for his bachelor of science degree in geography and is close to completing his B.Sc in biology, has arranged to make a $1.1 million planned gift to the University's Building Dreams and Futures campaign. His planned gift will support the Department of Geography by contributing to equipment purchases, bursaries, and the department's areas of greatest need.

Callaghan, who dropped out of high school about 20 years ago, thought going to university was "too far out of my league." He suffered a serious back injury when he was living near Prince Albert, and during two years of physiotherapy in Regina, his therapists told him he should go to university. He applied, and began his studies at the University of Regina in the fall of 1999. He remembers how important it was to have people to talk to when he became frustrated or discouraged.

"I had support from people, which was very different," says Callaghan. "I'd never had that before in my life. I'd never met people like that before."

Callaghan is working full-time for the U of R as field co-ordinator for water quality in the Qu'Appelle Valley watershed while he completes his degree in biology. He describes himself as very fortunate to be where he is today, and with prospects for an even brighter future.

"If it wasn't for a very small group of people who were very supportive, I wouldn't have made it this far. Everything I've done," he says, "is really their doing. Some have moved on, and some I've lost touch with, but they know who they are. My gift is one way I can acknowledge what they did for me."

Callaghan's planned gift gives a timely boost to the recent announcement by new U of R President Robert Hawkins that the University intends to raise an additional $25 million in its Building Dreams and Futures campaign by asking individuals to include the U of R in their estate plans. The announcement raises the University's fundraising goal from $75 million to $100 million. Hawkins also announced that the several donors have committed a total of more than $8 million in planned gifts to the University.

New University President Robert Hawkins (right) took over the mantle of the Building Dreams and Futures campaign from former President David Barnard at a special event on August 20. In his first announcement as president, Hawkins committed to raising an additional $25 million in planned gifts for the University, bringing the Building Dreams and Futures campaign goal to $100 million. Planned gifts are committed in the present but realized in the future through estate plans and life insurance policies.

FACES ON CAMPUS

Darlene Freitag says there's a great feeling of accomplishment in working with the hundreds of donors and volunteers who want to contribute to the University of Regina. She's had that wonderful feeling a lot recently, because of the community response to the University's Building Dreams and Futures fundraising campaign.

Freitag is a member of the U of R's Donor and Alumni Relations team. She doesn't look at her work as a "job" - she says it is an honour and a privilege to work with donors who are committed to the future of the University.

"My role is to arouse curiosity and inspire an interest with donors to support the U of R," Freitag says. "There is such a range of possible inspirations, such as a desire to memorialize someone special. It may start as an annual gift and continue with a donation from a will or estate. It's all about a commitment to relationships with a personal touch," Freitag continues,

Darlene Freitag

"because you're in constant contact with alumni, corporations, foundations and friends of the University."

After 12 years in a job she loves, Freitag is gratified to see how people respond to the University's growing reputation for academic and research excellence.

"I believe that supporting the University of Regina is a great opportunity for generous people to make a difference in their community," she says.
