

the university of regina faculty of arts is pleased to present the 2012 stapleford lecture one law for all understanding canada's indigenous constitution

by DR. JOHN BORROWS professor & robina chair in law, public policy and society university of minnesota law school

Canada's law is Indigenous. While it is heavily dependent on British and French legal traditions, it is also home-grown. Canada's law needs to become even more Indigenous. In addition to strengthening our European-derived legal traditions, it needs to further reflect the traditions of First Nations, Métis and Inuit peoples. When Canada's law incorporates the values, customs and ideals of all its peoples within its singular framework, freedom is enhanced, democracy is extended, and the rule of law is strengthened across our land.

WEDNESDAY 21 MARCH 2012

7:30 pm, research and innovation centre RIC 119 (new lab addition), university of regina all are welcome · no registration required free parking on campus in lot 10 · pay parking at kiosk and meters reception to follow · call 306-585-4226 for more information

University of Regina